OBAMA TO VISIT CUBA

1 President Barack Obama announced a historic visit to Cuba next month, speeding up the thaw in relations between the two Cold War former foes but igniting opposition from Republicans at home. In the first U.S. presidential trip to the Caribbean nation in nearly 90 years, Obama will meet with Cuban President Raul Castro, entrepreneurs and "Cubans from different walks of life" during the trip on March 21 and 22, the White House said. REUTERS

HOSPITAL PAID HACKERS

2 The president of Hollywood Presbyterian Medical Center said on Wednesday that his hospital paid hackers a ransom of $17,000 in bitcoins to regain control of their computer systems after a cyber attack. Allen Stefanek said in a statement that paying the ransom was the "quickest and most efficient way" of regaining access to the affected systems, which were crippled on Feb. 5 and interfered with hospital staff's ability to communicate electronically. REUTERS

SERIAL STOWAWAY ARREST

3 A woman who is barred from airports around the country due to multiple attempts to sneak past security checkpoints and board flights without a ticket will appear in court on trespassing charges on Thursday after being arrested at Chicago's O'Hare International Airport. BRIEF 'SHELTER IN PLACE'

4 Police were investigating reports of a person with a gun on campus at UMass Amherst while the school went on lockdown for approximately an hour. Text messages sent to UMass students said a handgun "was shown but not fired" by one of the suspects. At 7:20 p.m. the shelter in place order was lifted. "Shelter in place order has been lifted. Please resume normal activities. More information will be provided as it becomes available," the university said on Facebook. SAM NEWHOUSE

METHANE LEAK CAPPED

5 An underground natural gas pipeline rupture that caused the largest methane leak ever in California has been permanently capped, paving the way for thousands of displaced Los Angeles residents to return home, state regulators said. Officials confirmed that the subterranean pipeline breach at the Aliso Canyon gas storage field owned by Southern California Gas Co. was successfully sealed after a series of independent laboratory tests. Jason Marshall, chief deputy director of the California Department of Conservation, told reporters. REUTERS

CHAOTIC COMMUTE

6 Amid another day of chaotic commutes for public transit riders, Gov. Charlie Baker on Thursday delivered a forceful defense of proposed MBTA fare hikes as he tried to empathize with the frustration of the riders struggling to navigate through cancelled commuter trains and overcrowded T cars. Amtrak, which operates the rails that serve commuter train lines in and out of Boston's South Station, lost electronic control of signals and switches that allow trains to enter and exit the transit hub. SAM NEWHOUSE

Teens march in Boston for jobs

Youth Jobs Coalition demonstrators are asking lawmakers for a boost in youth employment support.

SPENCER BUELL
spencerbuell@metro.us

Several hundred teenagers from around Massachusetts marched through Boston on Thursday morning, calling on the state for more funding for youth employment.

The conspicuously young crowd — mainly students on February break from school — stopped traffic as they marched their way through the Financial District, before heading to the State House to lobby legislators.

The Youth Jobs Coalition is seeking an increase in funding for YouthWorks, a state program that pays to place Massachusetts low-income teenagers in positions at nonprofits and government offices.

They are asking legislators for $13 million for the program in next year's budget, which they said would fund nearly 5,200 jobs. Funding in the latest state budget was $11.5 million.

State funding helps young people supplement their income at a time when finding a job is particularly hard for teens. While unemployment in the state has fallen to pre-recession levels, youth unemployment remains high, with as many as one in three teenagers working at least part-time.

"Some of us need to support our families," said Angele Errie, 17-year-old teen organizer for a Thursday rally, which began at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul. "I'm going to college this year. Unfortunately my parents can't fully support my application fees, so I have to provide for myself as well as my parents providing for me."

The funding they're asking for would only make a dent in the larger problem of youth unemployment, she said. The rally's organizers said the state needs 90,000 jobs to fill the gap between available positions and young people looking for work.

"This year we're pushing for full youth employment," said 18-year-old Ashley Delva, a lead organizer for the coalition. "Five thousand is not enough and we need to slowly increase so we can get to 90,000 jobs."

The recession has hit young people especially hard, said Lew Finfer, director and organizer for the Massachusetts Communities Action Network.

The downturn shrunk the number of available jobs, and shifted more adults into lower-paying jobs that were once filled by more teens, he said.

More than half of Mas-

"That's why [we] do rallies — to prove that teens can help. They can make a difference. They can contribute."

Dominique Singletary, 17

sachusetts teenagers had jobs around 2000. In 2013, that figure was 28 percent, a study from Northeastern's Center for Labor Market Studies found.

At the pre-march rally, Eros Marquez, 16, volunteered to speak to the crowd of hundreds.

"We want jobs. We want money," the Worcester teenager said. "We want the opportunity to do better in the future."

Zoo welcomes dwarf goat called 'Chewbacca'

There's a new kid in town and she resides at the Franklin Park Zoo. A Nigerian dwarf goat named Leia gave birth inside a barn at Franklin Park Zoo's Franklin Farm early Tuesday morning. Her kid's name — Chewbacca. Just after birth the kid, which weighed 4 pounds at birth, was standing and was seen nursing. This is Leia's second kid with Lucky, a male Nigerian dwarf goat that also resides at the farm. FRANKLIN ZOO

Revere police officer injured in car chase

A Revere police officer was hospitalized Thursday due to injuries sustained when he crashed into a pole during an early morning chase.

The chase was headed into Chelsea from nearby Revere, Chelsea Police Chief Brian Kyes told WCVB, when the officer's cruiser, a Ford Explorer, crashed along Marginal Street into a pole.

Francesco Ortiz, who was working nearby and helped to pull the officer from the wrecked vehicle, told CBS, "He was just in pain, so much pain."

A Revere police cruiser crashed into a utility pole on Marginal Street. NICOLAUS CZARNECKI

He couldn't even talk. He was just like, 'Help me.'"

The chase began shortly before 8 a.m. when the officer was dispatched due to a reported suspicious party in a motor vehicle on Park Avenue in Revere, WCVB reported.

That call turned into the high-speed chase that injured the officer and allowed the suspect to successfully flee, CBS stated. He has not been caught.

The officer, whose name has not been released, was taken to Massachusetts General Hospital with non-life-threatening injuries, according to WCVB.

Pope says Trump 'not Christian,' Trump calls comment 'disgraceful'

Pope Francis assailed Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump's views on U.S. immigration as "not Christian" on Thursday, prompting the billionaire businessman to reprimand the religious leader as "disgraceful" for questioning his faith.

No stranger to controversy, Trump, the longtime party front-runner in national opinion polls, has vowed if elected president to build a wall between the United States and Mexico to keep out immigrants who enter illegally.

In a freewheeling conversation on his flight home from a visit to Mexico, Francis told reporters, "A person who thinks only about building walls, wherever they may be, and not building bridges, is not Christian."

The pope said he did not want to advise American Catholics on whether or not to vote for Trump, and it was not immediately clear what impact his remarks would have on Republicans likely to vote in the Nov. 8 election.

Republican Catholics appear to support Trump more than other Republicans do, according to a Reuters/Ipsos opinion poll.

As of 2014, 71 percent of the U.S. population identified as Christian, 21 percent of them Catholic, according to the Pew Research Center.

Asked if American Catholics should vote for someone with Trump's views, Francis said, "I am not going to get involved in that. I say only that this man is not Christian if he has said things like that. We must see if he said things in that way and in this I give the benefit of the doubt," he said.

Trump, a real estate developer and former reality TV star, said, "If and when the Vatican is attacked by ISIS, which as everyone knows is ISIS's ultimate trophy, I can promise you that the pope would have only wished and prayed that Donald Trump would have been president," Trump said in a speech in Kiawah Island, South Carolina, using an acronym for the Islamic State militant group.

"For a religious leader to question a person's faith is disgraceful," he said. Trump has said on occasion, and again on Thursday, that he is a proud of being Christian but emphasized early in the campaign that he does not talk about his faith as much as others might. REUTERS

SCALIA WAS CRUEL, BUT WE SHOULDN'T BE

The death of Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia last week drew mixed reactions all over social media.

For liberals, it meant the end of an extreme conservative force on the Supreme Court. To conservatives, it meant one fewer warrior for their cause.

As an openly gay black Ivy League grad, I regarded Scalia as the enemy. He wasn't fond of my ability to love my partner through marriage.

The first Italian-American Supreme Court justice even recently suggested that blacks don't belong in elite universities, which was beyond preposterous.

While some in the media have tried to whitewash his oppressive attitudes — labeling him a "Conservative Lion" — I'm not too concerned about that.

What disappoints me the most is how those who have risen — despite Scalia's cruel judicial attempts to suppress them — can't move past the pettiness. "Ding dong, the witch is dead," one person posted on my Facebook timeline.

"Scalia can finally rot in hell where he belongs," another wrote.

All the while, I just couldn't seem to find it in my heart to spew such hatred, because I didn't think it could make matters better.

Respect for the dead is a sacred value that was instilled in me when I was a child.

Regardless of how we may individually feel about Scalia, he was a lawful man who had a family.

It reminds me of seeing the racist tweets when former NAACP Chairman Julian Bond died. I was disgusted.

In this case, what makes us any different from our aggressors when we choose to celebrate the death of people who don't share our politics?

How do we foster a community of progressive resilience when we take advantage of the low-hanging fruit of malice?

What gains do we make when we fall into the trap of having double standards for cruelty?

Progressives shouldn't find victory in the absence of an adversary, but in the vindication of their allies.

It's about winning the war, not the battle. And you can be victorious with grace.

Will this be Leo's year? We'll find out on Sunday Feb. 28, but we wish DiCaprio would win for something other than "The Revenant." TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX

THE FUN STARTS HERE

No, no DiCaprio

Barring an asteroid making a beeline for our planet, it's the safest bet in the world: Next Sunday, Leonardo DiCaprio is going to win an Oscar. And it will take an even greater freak occurrence to change our minds about this: He shouldn't.

That's no diss on DiCaprio himself. He's a very fine actor. He should have even won the trophy two years ago, after he bulldozed his way through "The Wolf of Wall Street," a turn that required copious energy and movie star charisma.

Meanwhile, in "The Revenant," which will likely nab him his first Goldie, he crawled across snow, swam through cold water and growled like the Muppets' Animal. He suffered for his art, but only physically.

He'll be rewarded for his troubles, because the Academy, like countless award bodies already, have bought into his rhapsodies about how superhard "The Revenant" was to make. Still, people may one day notice he doesn't get the chance to do anything but hurt. His film is essentially a documentary about an actor who really, really wants his Oscar. Reward "The Martian's" Matt Damon instead!

Leo shouldn't win, and other Oscar thoughts

From the DiCaprio problem to #OscarsSoWhite, there are a lot of big deals in this year's Academy Awards race. MATT PRIGGE

#OSCARSSOWHITE

After the second year in a row in which all the actor nominees were blindingly white, there was finally a concerted effort to shame Oscar voters. Even ignoring that, "Creed" is obviously a better Oscar gobble than "The Revenant": a crowd-pleaser that was also respectable. Instead, the only nom it got was for the white guy (who still deserved it).

Both these "Creed" guys should have been nominated — and win. WARNER BROS. PICTURES

'MAD MAX: FURY ROAD' DESERVES 10 NOMINATIONS

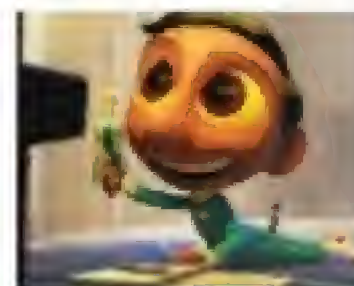

Behold "Mad Max: Fury Road's" flamethrower guitar dude. WARNER BROS. PICTURES

One of the great pleasures and very minor annoyances of the Oscar season has been explaining to shocked people that the action movie with a guitar flamethrower deserves the many nominations it received. Genre filmmaking is historically snubbed by the elites, but George Miller's fourquel/semi-reboot plowed into the Oscars with the force of a one-armed Charlize Theron driving her truck through that mindboggle of a sandstorm. We've been puffing up its importance by pointing out it's an angry feminist tract in which women battle their male oppressors. But it isn't just great genre filmmaking; it's great filmmaking. Witness it.

THE CASE OF 'SANJAY'S SUPER TEAM'

Not all categories are lily-white. The Best Animated Short roster includes "Sanjay's Super Team." The latest Pixar mini, it's explicitly about the melding of cultures. Directed by Sanjay Patel, it shows a young Indian boy trying to bond with his traditionalist father by recasting his Hindu gods as Western-style superheroes.

You probably saw "Sanjay's Super Team." It was attached to Pixar's "The Good Dinosaur." PIXAR, DISNEY

BRIE VS. SAOIRSE

Brie Larson, with Jacob Tremblay, plays a kidnapped woman in "Room." A24

As much as we love us some Cate Blanchett in "Carol," it won't be a shame if the Best Actress trophy goes to either "Room's" Brie Larson or "Brooklyn's" Saoirse Ronan.

Saoirse Ronan FOX SEARCHLIGHT

But one nice thing is that the two young actresses haven't descended into a WCW-style rivalry. They've bro'd down, been seen enjoying each other's company and not really caring which one winds up enshrined in Oscars history.

Everyone wants to tell Coheed and Cambria's Claudio Sanchez how to condition his hair

But he knows you're all wrong.

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachelraczka@metro.us

Claudio Sanchez is a Park Slope dad. He calls us from his couch at home in Brooklyn, where son Atlas Hendrix is asleep on his lap. The 37-year-old Coheed and Cambria frontman and his son (a bit over a year old now) just returned from a trip to the play gym, with a week to go before the band heads out on the road for their North American tour.

He's a morning person

A well-documented early morning creative, Sanchez says he's still able to wake before his son, but doesn't often do work around the house anymore. "I can't be loud, so I'll either go to the gym or I'll read," he explains. "I like to do work early, but musically, it doesn't work for the apartment. It's a bummer."

Writing on the road might not be an option either. "The bus is like a cradle, so I end up sleeping longer than I ever do in my own bed. It's got that soothing effect to it, especially when you're in a bunk," he says.

Conceptually yours

The band's October release, "The Color Before the Sun," was a step in a new creative direction — breaking from their decade-long dedication to weaving a science-fiction storyline into their last seven albums' narratives. This album was different, breaking from the pattern conceptually and physically, recording at St. Charles Studio in Nashville. The change in pace is an invigorating one for the band, Sanchez riffing on the idea of "removing a mask" with the new album.

"The concepts [from past albums] come from a personal place, but I'd utilize the concepts as a mask to hide what those songs were really about," he says. "The record isn't all that different — except [without] the mask."

The tour that follows will include the band's longtime pals Glassjaw, I The Mighty and newcomers Silver Snakes, who just signed with Sanchez's Evil Ink Records last month.

"I think [the tour is] really well-rounded, and a lot of cool stuff is going to happen through the night," says Sanchez. "On the Coheed side, there will be some songs that we've haven't ever played [live] in the past, but then, also, those crowd-pleasers that are very much part of a staple of our shows."

Low maintenance

Also a staple: Pantene Pro V for Curly Hair — only Pantene Pro V — which the epically fro-ed Sanchez lists as his go-to mane tamer.

"It's a damage-control kind of situation," he laughs. "It helps me get the knots out. It's funny, though, because every time I go to a store and I meet a fan, the first thing they want to do is tell me their idea of what I should use or do for my hair."

This writer suggested the Wet Brush.

But Sanchez, while grateful, isn't overly optimistic at another idea, "Every time it fails. You have no idea what this requires!"

Anya Taylor-Joy finds the woods really are haunted in the super-mega-hypebuzzed Sundance hit "The Witch." A24

'The Witch'

Director: Robert Eggers
Stars: Anya Taylor-Joy, Ralph Ineson
Rating: R

For a horror number about dirt and grime and hunger and gnarly monsters who can maybe transform into rabbits, "The Witch" is very clean. That is to say: It's a perfectly calibrated (and generally perfect) feature debut from a director who got exactly what he wanted. All one can do is admire it — and of course, occasionally jump and have nerves jangled.

Set amongst America's first Puritans circa 1630, it charts a family banished to the edge of a forest. There, their worst fears about evil prove true: There really is a witch, and she's out for all of them. But even when they're right, they're wrong: Each one turns on the pubescent eldest daughter (Anya Taylor-Joy, in a justly revered breakthrough), suspecting her budding femininity has put her in league with the nasty entity with gross hair.

"The Witch" might be too rarified, too arty to cross over to mainstream audiences. Even in its purpler moments — poison apples being coughed up, the freakiest goat since Sam Raimi's "Drag Me to Hell" — it plays like Ingmar Bergman, only with a mood sick with dread and tension. Taken on its own relatively minimalist grounds, it's perfect — maybe too perfect. It doesn't have the deep riches of other, less airtight films; what you see is what you get. But what you get is pretty great. MATT PRIGGE

Ralph Lauren's Victorian rock 'n' roll

The boldest fashion statement on the Ralph Lauren runway wasn't the menswear-inspired preppy looks in soothing shades of latte (billowing wool pants, cashmere cardigans and elegant blazers) that opened the show, nor was it the rock 'n' roll Victorian second half with giant ruffled collars and striking metallic jacquards, or even the statement-making evening wear (an exquisite black velvet jumpsuit with an open back that could stop traffic, and we wouldn't be surprised if the liquid latex-like gold gown that closed the show ends up on the Oscar red carpet). But what generated the most buzz was the clothes on the man himself. Lauren took his bow in rugged jeans and a tweed blazer with worn-out, ripped-up elbow patches. So chic in its new incarnation that mending would be a sin. Sign us up. TINA CHADHA

C'S DISAPPOINT, BUT FUTURE IS BRIGHT

@dannypicard

The Celtics were either going to be buyers or do nothing before Thursday's NBA trade deadline. As it turns out, they did nothing before 3 p.m. ET, meaning they'll keep all their picks and leave the roster intact through the end of the season.

While I'm not thrilled, I'm also not about to jump on my soapbox and call for Danny Ainge's head. An initial reaction of disappointment is normal, considering all the big names that have been thrown around in trade rumors the last few weeks. That type of post-deadline emotion would also be the product of knowing how good this current group of Celtics have played, and the amount of assets that the organization currently has. Whether it be players whose trade value will never be higher, or more draft picks than he knows what to do with, Ainge could have gone crazy on Thursday if he really wanted to. And I was all about doing something crazy. But it had to be a "good crazy."

The Celtics' long-term focus now shifts to the 2016 NBA Draft, where LSU's Ben Simmons is expected to go No. 1 overall. GETTY IMAGES

Nobody's happier than me that Ainge didn't trade the 2016 Nets first-round draft pick in a three-team deal that would have landed Kevin Love. Like Love, I also didn't understand why Blake Griffin's name was a popular trade topic. Seeing contending teams like the Cavaliers and Clippers think about trading players like Love and Griffin tells me more about those players than anything else. Wouldn't you want to add something at the deadline to build around those guys and try to win now?

My idea of "good crazy" would have been sending a king's ransom to the Kings for DeMarcus Cousins, or convincing the Rockets that they'd get a much better return if James Harden was made available instead of Dwight Howard. Speaking of Howard, I'm smiling just thinking about the fact that he won't be coming to Boston. But I do feel there was a three-team deal to be made with the Rockets and Hawks, involving Al Horford.

I was never giving up the Brooklyn pick for Horford, but here's a trade for you: Houston receives David Lee, Tiago Splitter, Jared Sullinger, and the Celtics' 2016 first-round pick; Atlanta receives Dwight Howard and the Mavericks' 2016 first-round pick (via Celtics); and Boston receives Horford. The money works. It satisfies every team's needs and reasonable demands under its respective circumstances. Why couldn't something like this have gone down on Thursday?

Regardless, the Celtics are in a good spot right now. There's still time to move some of their assets and become buyers this summer. So for that reason, I can't call for Ainge's head. But don't blame me for being disappointed.

Aries Pay more attention to what's going on in your own backyard. Be willing to compromise to avoid emotional situations that can have a detrimental effect on a relationship.

Taurus You'll be drawn to people who are not good for you. Don't make promises. Make a point to socialize with people who have as much to offer you as you do them.

Gemini What you do for others will make a difference. Your kindness will be returned and your popularity will increase, allowing you to maneuver into a better position.

Cancer Emotions will surface. Consider what you can do to maximize your chances of getting others to do things for you. Let your intuition guide you. Refrain from being pushy.

Leo Concentrate on ways to bring about positive change to your financial and domestic situation. A change of environment, scenery or lifestyle will improve your mood.

Virgo Do what you can to help others. Taking on a physical challenge to ensure that someone is spared an impossible task will result in an ally for life. An opportunity awaits you.

Libra Be careful how you react to what others say and do. You are likely to misinterpret what someone is telling you. Don't get wrapped up in emotional situations.

Scorpio Stand up for your beliefs. If someone opposes you, walk away. You are better off accomplishing what you can and allowing others the freedom to do as they please.

Sagittarius Be creative with the way you handle your money. Strive to save, not spend. Look for reasonable ways to celebrate or to be entertained. Romance doesn't have to be costly.

Capricorn If you treat others well, you will be given the opportunity to lead. Do your share in order to make gains. Social activities will lead to new opportunities and connections.

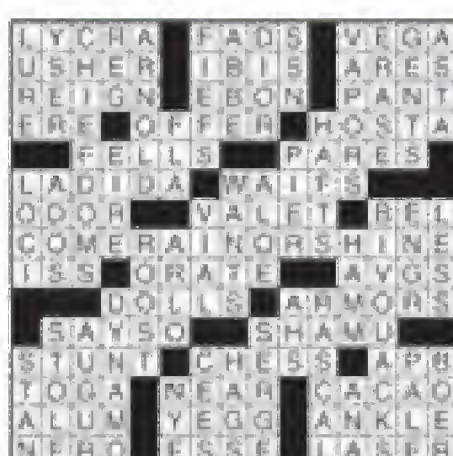

Aquarius Take responsibility and do what has to be done before you move on to more entertaining pastimes. Love and romance will light up the end of your day.

Pisces Do something that will help you stand out or bring you greater recognition. Money will come to you if you negotiate creatively.
